

RPG Trader Enters Public Beta Ahead of June Launch

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

New tabletop RPG marketplace reaches 196 users and 390 products within its first five days.

Sydney, Australia – RPG Trader, a new marketplace for tabletop roleplaying games operated by Ten Acre Games, has entered public beta ahead of its official launch on 9 June 2026.

Built by active tabletop RPG creators, publishers, and sellers, RPG Trader is designed to make it easier for creators to publish and sell their work while helping players discover new games and supplements.

In its first five days of public beta, the platform has attracted 199 registered users, including 83 creators who have already added 406 products.

"As creators ourselves, we've spent years publishing games and participating in the tabletop RPG community," said Hugh Lashbrooke, Founder & Publisher at Ten Acre Games. "RPG Trader was built to make publishing, selling, and discovering tabletop RPGs easier for everyone involved. We wanted to create a platform that feels modern, approachable, and genuinely useful for creators, while helping players find great games they might otherwise never discover."

The platform includes a suite of creator tools, integrated print-on-demand support with global shipping, and twelve tabletop RPG-specific taxonomies designed to improve product discoverability. RPG Trader also maintains a firm policy against the inclusion of products containing generative AI-created content, choosing to celebrate human creativity and passion.

The public beta is open now, allowing creators to create accounts, upload products, and prepare their catalogues ahead of launch. Checkout functionality remains disabled during the beta period, with sales scheduled to begin when the marketplace officially launches on 9 June 2026.
